Style / Character

Designed by London-based March and White, the interior-design group behind the look of the Café Royal members' club in Piccadilly and the Arts Club in Mayfair, the hotel's two Grade II-listed buildings (a former 18th-century East India Company warehouse and an adjacent Georgian townhouse) boast stylish interiors with a sophisticated throwback feel, with detailed upholstery inspired by the early design patterns of the fashion brand Chanel.

The hotel oozes Fifties-inspired glamour, with mid-century style furnishings, including wingback armchairs, low-slung sofas and gold-coloured monochrome metallic lamps, with subtle Art Deco inspirations and modern touches.

Service

There is a small but well-equipped fitness room with treadmills, elliptical machines, a bike, rowing machine, and a few other machines for upper and lower body training. There is a separate room for training with weights, and an airy yoga studio with large picture windows. The spa is yet to be opened for guests but treatments will be provided by the beauty brand Elemis. Guests can also access an outdoor private garden, overlooked by the Brasserie, the hotel's restaurant, and the adjacent greenhouse-like Garden Room lounge. The staff are welcoming and friendly, while the service is attentive.
